WHEN THE NEW P. R. R. STATION IN MANHATTAN IS FINISHED.

Important Move in Behalf of Jersey Cen ly to the New Tunnels-First Mishap.

There is a prospect that the Central Railroad of New Jersey will rent the Winder, who followed her over the rail Jersey City station of the Pennsylvania Railroad when the latter moves into its new Thirty-fourth street station in Manhattan. The idea seems to be that in this way the Central can avail itself of the newly completed tunnels. An official of the Hudson and Manhattan said last night that he understood that the Jersey Central, whose New Jersey terminus is now at Communipaw and over whose lines the Reading and B. and O. trains come in, was considering the proposition.

The first mishap in the service of the new tunnels occurred just after the rush hour last evening. It put the northern tunnel out of commission for twenty minutes and a shuttle train was run back and forth in the southern tube. Five empties were taken out from the Fulton street platform at 8:17, to be backed into a siding, where the last three cars were to be dropped off. The switch about 200 feet from the end of the When the cars had crossed over the switch the towerman threw it to lead to the siding and the reverse power was put on. There are still grease and rust on the rails and, they being poor conductors, the circuit was slow in completing. One truck of the last car took the main track back; then the switch was swung and the front trucks started down the siding. The train was stopped and the car was not derailed.

E. T. Munger, the general manager, who was away at the time, said that it eughtn't to have taken twenty minutes to clear the track. No one knew exactly how to fix things for a few minutes. Then the straddling car was pushed wholly back on the main track and traffic was resumed. In the interval the two and a half minute schedule was reduced to one train each way every ten minutes.

The trains moved precisely to schedule during most of the day. During the rush hours seventeen ticket booths were used in concourse and a dozen ticket choppers the concourse and a dozen ticket choppers gave access to the stairways of the track levels. The side door trains and the plan by which passengers enter trains by one platform and leave by another prevented congestion. On big days the company will supplement the stationary ticket booths with movable booths, so that it booths with movable booths, so that it will be possible for passengers to grab tickets at thirty windows.

There was no way to learn accurately last night just how many people travelled in the twenty-four hours from 3 P. M. on Monday until 3 P. M. yesterday, because the company had been too busy to check up. One of the officials who had kept an eye on the crowds said that 100,000 would be a reasonable figure. During the rush "Dr. Huntington is eye on the crowds said that 100,000 would be a reasonable figure. During tha rush hours of Monday night and last night, from 4:30 until 8, and the rush of yesterday morning, from 7 until 9, seven car trains running on a two and a half and three minute headway carried from 300 to 400 passengers to the train. The popularity of the tubes cut down ferry traffic materially. The Hudson Tunnel Company estimates that the ferries carry 120,000,000 persons a year. They think they will be able to handle 100,000,000 without crowding themselves much.

Any shirtwaist girl knows how easy Any shirtwaist girl knows how easy it is lose the safety pin jigger that couples the rear terminals of waist and skirt. The darned thing is apt to come unfastened and fall out, producing a hiatus that has to be nursed very carefully until home and mother are reached. Well, that's a feminine sorrow that the Hudson and Manhattan Railroad Company and President William G. McAdoo are doing their best to ease.

The Jersey City girls found that out The Jersey City girls found that out very quickly yesterday and there was a grand rush for Hudson terminal safety pins common. All you had to do yesterday if you were a flustered young feminine creature hustling from Manhattan to Jersey City by way of the new tubes and your waist had fetched loose in the back was to apply to the McAdoo company for a free safety pin. The women's rest room in the terminal concourse at 30 Church street was a repair shop for sundered garments.

The "three minutes to Jersey City" cry that tickles the he Jerseyite who works in Manhattan wasn't half so pleasing to the Jersey girls as the preparations the Hudson tunnel people have made to give them a chance to pretty up before taking the dip under the river. Free safety pins were only a detail in the scheme for the comfort and relief of the women passengers.

President McAdoo, inspecting the concourse several weeks ago while the painters and decorators were at work, coked in the women's rest room.

"Oh, the usual things," said the concourse superintendent.

"I guess we had better do a little more than that," said Mr. McAdoo. "Give 'em face powder and hairpins and safety pins and things like that."

So they did as Mr. McAdoo ordered. Any girl on her way to Jersey after a day's work in the city can get a few hairpins, not the flossy things of course, but plain, substantial pins that will keep a puff or a rat or a phony curl nailed down. For a nickel a girl can get an individual cake of soap and a towel. The company doesn't furnish manicurists and masseuses free, because they are classed as luxuries, while shirtwaist pins and hair anchors and face powder belong to the necessaries of life, as everybody knows.

It took the Jersey girls just part of one day to discover the good thing and the rest room of the big terminal was as busy as the ribbon counter of a Sixth avenue department store. Naturally the company wasn't quite ready yesterday to take care of all the women who applied, but in a few days there will be free pins and things for any girl who needs them.

The Hudson Tunnel people are showing their consideration for women in another way. The concourse is the newest thing in railroad terminals. It is a great market under one roof, the booths either open entirely or englosed by glass sides. You can buy soda (water, apple juice, candy, books, automobiles, straw hats, groceries, cigarettes, a suit of clothes and fruit while beating it for a train.

According to the statement of Miss Broadbent in the city jail, she came here this morning with the intention of ending "I am a bad woman and unfit to live," she told the jail officials, but she refused to give particulars of her reason for attempting suicide.

Capt. Gale of the Princeton noticed nothing strange about the woman when she boarded his boat with a score of other pleasure seekers shortly before noon. She chatted with the men in charge of the boat during the trip seaward and when the boat was about to return to the harbor she went to the rail and leaped over-board. The boat flashed past her in the seaway before any of the passengers could grab her. Winder was at the bow and he dived in time to catch the woman

BOSTON, July 20 .- Dr. W. R. Huntington is still alive at the home of his son-inlaw, Royal Robbins, in Carey street. is gradually growing weaker and death is expected soon. To-day Dr. Huntington seemed to grow weaker throughout the earlier hours, and this afternoon he appeared to rally again. However, the gain was not permanent, as to-night he is very weak. Regardless of this fact Dr. Winslow still expects him to live for

The Rev. Karl Reiland, rector's assistant at Grace Church, was in constant communication yesterday with Royal Robbins, son-in-law of Dr. Huntington.

"Dr. Huntington is now dangerously ill," said Mr. Reiland. "While there is not much change in his condition from day to day, there has been no improvement and he is gradually growing weaker. The chance of his ultimate recovery is extremely slight. Everything possible is being done for him. While no one can tell with exact certainty the nature of the trouble from which he is suffering. the strong probability is that he is victim of cancer of the stomach."

The doctors, said Mr. Reiland, did no believe that Dr. Huntington could live more than two or three days more at the most. It was simply a question of his strength at present, and the at-tending physicians had been surprised at his vitality.

"Despite his suffering Dr. Huntington's mind has remained perfectly clear."

Out in Lansing, Mich., there is a man anxious to marry Miss Mary Mallon, known as Typhoid Mary, who for the past two years has been a patient in the isolation hospital on North Brother Island by order of the Health Department. PASSENGERS FROM ST. GEORGE SEE THE MARTHASTEVENS SUNK

The Gowanus Drops a Boat to Help Pick Up the Crew-Southern Pacific Tug Confidence Rammed the Old Barge -Assistant Engineer Dies of Apoplexy

A marine disaster in miniature, which esulted in the sinking of the steam barge Martha Stevens and the death of one man, occurred before the eyes of several hundred persons on board the Staten Island ferry Gowanus yesterday morning about half a mile northeast of Robbins Reef Zachariah Logue of Bound Brook, assistant engineer of the Martha Stevens died of apoplexy after two of the crew of the barge had pulled him out of the water. He was 60 years old.

The Martha Stevens was 47 years herself, and was once a schooner, with the quality, notable in her youth, that she was built of iron. She belonged to the waddling across the bay on her way in from Philadelphia laden with coils of wire, when through some mistake in signals, or lack of them, not yet explained, the Southern Pacific tug Confidence, coming up on her port quarter, rammed her just aft of the engine room. A big hole was torn in the barge's side and she Capt. Edward A. Foster of the Martha Stevens and William Reichman, her chief engineer, were quick to see that there was no chance to lower the boats. Her crew of seven men and one woman, Rebecca Johnson, the cook, with her three-year-old daughter Irma, took to the water.

The captain and the chief engineer found Logue floundering beside them. Logue had been asleep in his bunk and had gone into the water in a daze. The captain and Eichman grabbed him under the arms and swam with him to the top of the after part of the deckkouse, which remained awash after the boat had settled on the mud.

The Gowanus, which was coming up from St. George, was not more than a quarter of a mile from the barge when she went down. Capt. Samuel Randolph stopped the ferryboat, turned her and had one of her boats lowered to the assistance of the men in the water. The passengers on the ferryboat lined the rails, watching the work of rescue.

The Confidence, herself uninjured, had backed out of the hole in the side of the Martha Stevens and stood by. Her captain, William Paasch, and Capt. Mott of the police boat Patrol, which happened to be near, joined in the work of pulling the crew of the barge out of the wet.

SHIPWRECK ON FERRY ROUTE GYPSIES CAN'T COME HERE. Notice to the Tribes That This Land Is Locked Against Them, Rich or Poor.

> In the steerage of the Lamport and Holt liner Verdi, which sails to-morrow for Brazil and Argentina, will be twenty-four Rumanian gypsies, who although they had more than $1,500 were deported chiefly because it has been the habit of Ellis Island to keep out the unworthy of the nomadio type. There are six men in the band, all black eyed, dark skinned, black haired fellows with unamiable countenances. They arrived here recently by the liner Tennyson. They said that they were going to Oakland, Cal., where there is an encampment of gypsies, and that they expected to sail thence to Asia. They had been telling fortunes, trading horses and doing other things that gypsies have the name of doing and not saying anything about, all through South America. At Buenos Ayres they disposed of their live stock and wagons and bought tickets for New York. They spoke a dialect of Romany which an interpreter on Ellis Island understood, and they told him that they were very honest and good gypsies.

They learned the other day that they were to be sent back and they began cutting up in pantomime. Every uniformed inspector who came near them received a villainous glare from flerce eyes, and six forefingers were passed under six swarthy throats. This was the theatrical way the gypsies used to convey the information that everybody who had a hand in sending that everybody who had a hand in sending them away from America might expect to get his windpipe slit by the vengeful nomads or their friends here. The in-spectors laughed. Fifteen other gypsies who had arrived by the Hamburg-Ameri-can liner President Grant and were sent Europeward last Saturday, also had made comic opera signs at the inspectors and inclined to believe that the gypsies were too fond of other people's horses and chickens. They had never stolen any chickens from him, however, perhaps because he had no chickens. The band had enough money to take them to California, and might have some over after they got there but he hardly thought that they got there, but he hardly thought that California would thank the Government of the United States for sending her people with traditional reputations as vagabonds. Gypsies certainly were not produce anyhow.

Wen't Presecute Woman Autoist, Though His Skull Was Fractured.

Abraham Hollander of 17 East 112th spectors laughed. Fifteen other gypsies who had arrived by the Hamburg-American liner President Grant and were sent Europeward last Saturday, also had made comic opera signs at the inspectors and soowled in the flercest Romany style.

Commissioner Williams said that he looked upon the gypsies as an undesirable class, as his predecessors had, and he was making no precedent by excluding them.

Abraham Hollander of 17 East 112th street refused in the Essex Market court yesterday to prosecute Miss Maud Johnson of 161 Henry street, Brooklyn, who ran over Hollander in her automobile on June 9. Therefore the assault charge against ber was dismissed. Hollander was in St. Vincent's Hospital up to a week ago with a fractured skull as the result of the accident, but is now pecovered.
